THE SCISSORS FISH.

Strange Species Is Found In Mediterranean Sea.

Another strange marine animal of the fish tribe has just been obtained from the Mediterranean Sea. Somewhere in the neighborhood of a mile and a quarter deep it was caught by a deep-sea dredging ship. The fish is about 18 inches long and as deep black as Cerberus. It has been dubbed by the seamen who carried it to the Louvre the "scissors fish, because its head in appearance is half-way between that of an alligator and a pair of large shears.

The unusual disposition of the jaws and the double-blade mouth give it a odd appearance. The jaws are nearly four times as long as the head of the fish. From the snout to the brain is four inches, while the two jaws look all the world like the blades of scissors, and slight toothlike edges, visible but easily felt, run all the way along them. The mouth is a vertical tunnel, of which the body is a long drawn out extension. In this position food is prepared for assimilation.

The fins for swimming purposes are placed near the back; there are no belly fins. The tail of the fish is like the tail of a monkey, round and serpentine. It is not flat, as in other fishes. Its name to be properly pronounced requires several sets of false teeth and a dozen tongues. It is a eurypharynx pelecánoides.
